WAS AIMED AT HEART.

A life which contained a prosperous years, was ended by the suicide of J. Burton, a local mining man, who lives who was acquainted with Thomas for years, told how the man deserted his wife and daughters in Colorado Springs and came to Utah with another wo-Sertha Lawson was the name of this woman. She first appeared in Vernal last fall with Thomas. In that city the man tried to kill himself with morphine during the winter. The Lawson woman is supposed to be in Salt Lake now. Mrs. Thomas and her two daughters, one 16 and the other 18 daughters, one 16 and the other 18 years of age, are in Colorado Springs where, up to his departure, Thomas had been a real estate man, well respected and possessed of some means.

lived together, and to Burton the woman confessed that she had read letters from Mrs. Thomas begging her husband to come back home.

In Vernal Thomas advertised as a real estate man and opened an office. He was behaving himself fairly well until the latter part of the winter. Then he began to gamble. At one sitting he lost $100. He went into a saloon and announced that he would give all he had—$4—to anyone who would shoot him. A young man took the offer. In a back room a big calibre revolver was unloaded, and then brought forth. A paper was pinned over Thomas' heart. He stood with folded arms awaiting the shot. A dull click was all that came, and those who had expected to see Thomas flinch were disappointed. He walked away to a drug store and bought morphine tablets. He reappeared in the saloon, tossed his pocket book across the floom, yelled "I'm going home now," and swallowed the poison. He started on a run for his house, with several men following. They overtook him in the dooryard and followed him into the house. They got a doctor and a stomach pump and Thomas came back to this life and its troubles. to this life and its troubles.

Ceremony on Race Track.

The ceremony began about 4 p. m. on the race track and just in front of the grand stand. Elder Goddard explained that it was to be merely a representation of the native nuptials and that no real knot would be tied.

He explained that one of the warriors of the Ngatikahga tribe desired to wed a Nagtirangi girl. As the former tribe has its habitat in the eastern part of New Zealand and the latter tribe in the so-called King country, the prospective groom must overcome natural hostility with diplomary. The chiefs of the respective sides acted/as representatives of the bride and groom. Bowles, the groom and another tribesman lined up on one side, facing Hardy, the bride and a kinsman. Bowles than chanted the fame of the would-be groom and called on Hardy to tell of the qualities of the bride. A quarrel ensued over their relative merits and for a time war threatened to succeed wooing. However, peace was restored and then came the "hongi," the native greeting of peace.
